Joint HSAB and HSCB Conference – Adopting a Family Approach to Domestic Abuse
The Hampshire Safeguarding Adults and Children’s Boards are holding a joint conference on Tuesday 12th September 2017 on the topic of: Adopting a Family Approach to Domestic Abuse.

The Conference Learning Outcomes are:
• To understand what is meant by ‘adopting a family approach’ to working with both children and adults and their families
• To understand the types and forms of domestic abuse, including coercive control, adolescent relationship abuse, and adolescent on parent abuse
• To understand the impact of domestic abuse on the family as a whole
• To understand what support and interventions are available to both perpetrators and victims of domestic abuse, and their families in Hampshire
• To be confident in the application of legal frameworks and national / local learning in frontline practice

We would be grateful if you could share this information within your organisation and any networks you’re linked into. Please follow the link below for further information and to book a place.

Recruiting service users for evaluation interviews
The NSPCC’s Impact and evidence series features a blog by Helen Brookes, evaluation officer at NSPCC, offering advice to researchers who need to carry out interviews with service users. Tips on how to successfully recruit service users for evaluation interviews include: using creative ways to make contact; offering incentives; and knowing when to stop trying.

Briefing: safeguarding lessons
Farrer & Co has published a briefing looking at what can be learned from the death of Shanay Walker, a seven year old girl who died from a brain injury in July 2014 while under a special guardianship order. Lessons for all organisations working with children include: reminding staff that they all have a responsibility to identify children suffering or likely to suffer significant harm and to alert others to their concerns; routinely follow up referrals to children’s social care in writing; information which suggests that a child has self-harmed should be taken very seriously, particularly in primary age children where self-harm is rare.

The NICE Guideline on recognising abuse and neglect in children was published in draft form in February
Full publication expected September 2017

The RCN has launched a new guide to help nurses spot victims of trafficking and address the lack of modern slavery awareness training in the NHS.

The new guide – designed to fit in the uniform pocket – will be sent to nursing staff across the UK after it was revealed that 86 per cent of staff do not feel adequately trained. This is despite a fifth of victims admitting coming into contact with health care services during their time in slavery.

Helping social work practitioners communicate with deaf children

As part of Deaf Awareness Week the NSPCC’s Impact and evidence series features a blog by Professor Alys Young, Professor of Social Work Education and Research, University of Manchester, looking at working with sign language interpreters in child protection. Tips for working with interpreters include: putting the child’s strengths, requirements and needs at the centre of your practice; reflect on your own language limitations; and being aware of the complexities of working alongside interpreters who are practice professionals in their own right.

Safeguarding children: dealing with low-level concerns about adults

Farrer & Co has published a briefing on safeguarding children where the level of concern about an adult does not reach the threshold of an allegation. Drawing on academic research and serious case reviews, the briefing explains how organisations can create a culture that enables staff to share concerns and how they should respond including: testing their practice by reviewing the concerns that have been shared in the recent past; encouraging everyone to share all concerns about adults, including those that do not meet the threshold of an allegation; ensuring that all concerns that do not meet the threshold of an allegation are recorded centrally so that any patterns can be spotted.

Minding the baby: findings from research

The NSPCC has published findings from research carried out by University College London looking at practitioners’ experiences of using the Minding the baby (MTB) parenting programme and parents’ experiences of receiving the programme. Findings from a pilot MTB programme, which promotes secure parent-child attachment relationships among disadvantaged families where the mother is under 25, show that: practitioners were able to build strong relationships with mothers at an early stage, ideally before the baby was born and tailor the programme to the mothers’ existing needs and capabilities; parents found the programme flexible and tailored to their needs and focussed on the mother and baby together rather than just the baby.

Using standardised measures to evaluate behaviour change in young people
The NSPCC's Impact and evidence series features a blog by Emma Belton, Associate Head of Evaluation at the NSPCC, discussing the use of standardised measures to evaluate the impact of the NSPCC Turn the page treatment programme for 12-18-year-old boys with harmful sexual behaviour. Challenges encountered collecting data for evaluation included: 28% of young people who started the programme didn't consent to taking part in the evaluation; 27% of young people dropped out of the programme before completion; 20-30% of young people were not responding reliably to the questionnaires.
